VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS ON JOURNALISM. Edited by CHARLES F. WINGATE (California). 12mo. $1.50.

Neither in this country, nor in England, have the most successful newspapers been conducted on any foregone theories. They have grown up, as grows the grass, open to the influence of the times and seasons, enjoying the presence of the sunshine and the dew, but taking their shape from the occurrences of the day, and giving expression to the spirit of the age, rather than following a prescribed course, like the builder of a house or a ship, who is confined to the outlines and proportions of "sound," which is here reproduced, the author indulges in a little excusable pride on account of the reception which has been given to the work in the scientific world.

"Though bearing, it may be, an undue share of the imperfection which cleaves to all human effort, the work has already found its way into the literature of various nations of diverse intellectual standing. Last year, for example, a new German edition was published "under the special supervision" of Helmholtz and Wiedemann. That men so eminent, and so overladen with official duties, should add to these the labor of examining and correcting every proof-sheet of a work like this, shows that they consider it to be what it was meant to be—a serious attempt to improve the public knowledge of science. It is especially gratifying to me to thus assure that not in England alone has the book met a popular want, but also in that learned land to which I owe my scientific education. Before me, on the other hand, lie two volumes of foot-sack, curiously stitched, and printed in characters the meaning of which I am incompetent to penetrate. Here and there, however, I notice the familiar figures of the former editions of "sound." For these volumes I am indebted to Mr. John Fryer of Shanghai, who, along with them, favored me, a few weeks ago, with a letter, from which the following is an extract: "One day, writes Mr. Fryer, soon after the first copy of your work on "sound" reached Shanghai, I was reading it in my study, when an intelligent official, named Hall-chung-hu, noticed some of the engravings, and asked me to explain them to him. He became so deeply interested in the subject of Acoustics, that nothing would satisfy him but to make a translation. Since, however, engineering and other works were then considered to be more practical importance by the higher authorities, we agreed to postpone our work on the sine-wave, until a more convenient time. All the French occupations, taught thoroughly, Training class for mothers and teachers. Schools and families supplied with Kindergarten. Miss E. M. COOK, Principal.
